INTRODUCTION

Assisted Living is a living style option for seniors, offering a residence, housekeeping, and personal care services, as well as safety, companionship, and medication management. It stresses independence, dignity, individuality, and privacy while offering 24-hour assistance if needed. Assisted Living is not an institution and is not appropriate for those who need Skilled Nursing Care. It is not a Nursing Home.

Selecting an Assisted Living Facility for yourself or a loved one is an important decision as it will greatly influence the quality of daily living for the latter part of one's life. This is not a decision to be taken lightly. There are many facilities available, some are excellent, and unfortunately some are poor. Because this decision is so important, it is often an emotional and stressful one. This checklist is designed to help take some of the emotion out of the decision-making process by focusing on many of the important factors that need to be considered. Utilizing this document will enable you to easily compare facilities, prioritize your needs, and assist you in choosing the Assisted Living Facility that best suits your or your loved ones expected lifestyle.

If you are a family member placing a loved one with Alzheimer's Disease or Dementia in an Assisted Living Facility, your needs and concerns are unique and are addressed in the Alzheimer's and Dementia section at the end of this document. However, most of the items discussed in this document apply to all residents, regardless of cognitive or physical impairment.

This checklist is intended as a guide. There is no facility that could possibly offer all the options contained in this checklist. Moreover, all of the items in this list are not appropriate for all people. Prioritize your needs, compare facilities, and this checklist will help you make the decision that best suits your needs or the needs of a loved one.

This document was designed based on my personal experience selecting an Assisted Living facility for my mother and helping her adjust to the Assisted Living lifestyle. During her five years in the ALF, the facility went through numerous personnel and management changes including a change of ownership. This resulted in different operating philosophies, price changes, and, most importantly, varying levels in the quality of her care. With this checklist I have attempted to provide an extensive list of considerations that will help prepare you for not only the initial selection process, but for some of the future changes that may occur.

I trust this checklist will serve you well.

MY STORY

Assisted Living residents make up a diverse population. They range from those who are nearly self-sufficient and independent with active social lives to those who need assistance with even minimal daily tasks. In my case, my widowed mother had been diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease two years earlier and was no longer safe at home. She needed a "special care", or Alzheimer's/Dementia secured unit.

I had no prior experience with elder care and very little information when I began my search for a home for my mother. I was determined to find a very special place for a very special lady. Over the course of a month, I visited fifteen facilities, rejected some immediately, revisited others, and became overwhelmed trying to sort out all the information. Trying to remember all the differences in policies, amenities, and services made it very difficult to compare facilities. This checklist will help minimize those difficulties for you.

Eventually, I narrowed my list to three facilities and asked other family members to make visits and offer their opinions. This process eliminated one facility. My final choice was based on three key considerations I thought were very important; location, the activity program, and the staff. My mother moved into her new home and began to adjust to her new surroundings.

Things were going well until a medical emergency occurred a few months after her move and she was rushed to the emergency room by ambulance. No medical information was sent to the hospital by the facility despite all the initial promises that a packet of emergency medical information would accompany her in an emergency situation. Emergency care was delayed in a very serious situation until I could be located by phone to provide critical information. I addressed this discrepancy with facility management in two meetings and through two letters with no satisfaction. Finally, I filed a complaint of unsafe medical practices with the Office of Elder Affairs. An investigation was conducted, and the finding was in my favor. The facility was required to provide medical information in the event of an emergency for all residents. Shortly thereafter, the management team at this facility was replaced.

For two and a half years everything was fine and then, due to personnel promotions, management changed again. Under new leadership, the focus of the facility changed from providing the best possible quality of life to being solely profit based. Long time employees resigned, staffing was cut to a bare bones level, and the quality of care decreased significantly. I expressed my concern to management. The response was to assure me that these problems were transitional and would be worked out for the benefit of all. It took many meetings over a year long period before there were positive signs of a return to high quality care.

The facility was then sold to a group of investors and there was an even stronger focus on making a profit at the expense of providing quality care. Once again, more employees resigned, staffing was cut further, and the quality of care decreased. I initiated dialog with families of other residents and jointly formed a Family Council. This was met with resistance by the new owners; however, we were determined to settle for nothing less than the high level of care we had become accustomed to – and were paying for. Small changes started to occur just before my Mother's condition deteriorated and she passed away.

Overall, I was content with my choice of facility in spite of all the management difficulties. My mother's apartment suited her needs, allowed her to keep her cherished personal belongings, and gave her privacy when she wanted it. Most of the staff was exceptional and her care generally was excellent. There was a photo album in a common room on her floor ... it contained pictures of my smiling mother at cookouts, on field trips, in the garden, dining out, at musical programs, craft classes, visiting with children, and engaging in the many activities that occurred each day. She liked the staff and although she couldn't remember their names, she knew their faces and smiled when she saw them. Additionally, I had peace of mind knowing she was safe, well cared for, engaged in pleasant activities on a daily basis, and her quality of life was the best I could provide for her.

HOW TO BEST USE THIS CHECKLIST

This checklist is designed for use as an assessment tool for selecting an Assisted Living Facility for yourself or for a loved one. The evaluation process contained on the following pages is quite thorough and will result in a careful, thoughtful analysis. Your investment in time for conducting this analysis will reap high rewards. All too often during the evaluation process it becomes easy to confuse what you have seen in each of the facilities you have visited. This checklist will help to minimize that confusion. A comprehensive assessment process, such as this one, will help keep you focused on the mission of finding the most appropriate facility to suit the needs of your loved one's unique living style.

It is envisioned this checklist can be used in one of three ways:

1. You could utilize this tool to personally conduct an assessment of three (3) different Assisted Living Facilities.
2. You could assign several different relatives to conduct evaluations and use this document to compare the differences.
3. You could utilize an unbiased third party to conduct this assessment. Identify the characteristics that are important to you or your family member and let the unbiased third party do the rest. Then visit the facility yourself to make certain you feel comfortable with the analysis.

While many of the topics described herein may be considered important for many people, all of them may not apply to you or your family member. Some, obviously, will be more important than others depending upon your likes and dislikes, your interests, and your personal lifestyle. However, all of these topics merit your consideration as you begin to search for the best Assisted Living Facility. Included in Section XIII. is a table with 20 blank spaces for you to add items that you consider to be of primary importance in your selection process.

The "Keys" for conducting the self-assessment is as follows:

- Y = Yes, this service or amenity exists at a satisfactory level.
- N = No, this does not exist at a satisfactory level or is not offered at all.
- NI = This topic is Not Important to either my family or me at this time.

VIII. SAMPLE - MEDICAL EMERGENCY INFORMATION PACKET. (Partial)

Medical Emergency Information Packet:

This packet of information should be maintained and updated either by the resident or a family member. It should accompany the resident to the hospital emergency room in case of a medical emergency. Three copies should be given to the Assisted Living facility; one for the nurse's files, one for the emergency file, and one in the resident's locked medication cabinet. Three copies are given to ensure that time is not wasted during an emergency while a copy is being made, or an office key is located. Additionally, family members should have copies in the event they are contacted by the emergency room staff for more information. In many emergency situations residents are unable to speak for themselves and need a family member to provide accurate, updated medical information. A sample of a medical emergency information packet is shown on the following pages.
